Pat Flanagan's Logic
"Patrick Flanagan," said the District Attorney one day in court, "stand up and plead guilty or not guilty to the charge the Commonwealth hath preferred against you."
When Pat complied with the polite request thus made by the officer of the law, the Attorney proceeded to read from a paper in his hand a very graphic description of a certain transaction in which Pat had been engaged a few days before.
"What say you? Are you guilty or not guilty?" asked the Attorney.
"I'm not guilty of half them things you've read to me," said Pat, looking at the court;
"but I did have a bit of a row last Saturday was a week; an' I dunno jist wat I did, f'r ye see I was stavin' drunk on the meanest corn whiskey yer honor iver tasted."
"But, Patrick, we never taste it," said the Judge, while a smile lurked in an ambush behind the grave judicial countenance.
"Sure now, don't ye, though?" said Pat, with a look of mingled surprise and incoherence—"don't ye, though? Well, thin, yer ought to, jist once, to know how it acts, and to know how to pity a poor fellow that does.
Sure, yer honor grants licenses, an' how do ye know the un-chief yer don't to honest men like myself, unless ye take a drink now and then, jist to see how it makes a man be himself?"
"Who gave you the liquor, Patrick?"
asked the Court on a voyage of discovery.
"Well, I dunno wat his name," said Pat, too honest to turn informer, while a gleam of true native humor twinkled in his eye.
"But I know I seed a license hangin' behind the bar. Ye see, Judge, I was wroughtin' for the city, on the streets, jist close buy, an'
I was drouthy, an' it was so bandy I went in and took a drink that ortent to have hurt a baby, and in tin seconds I was crazy drunk, an' I dreamt that I was at a Donny-brook fair; an' that's all I remember till nixt mornin', when I was boardin' at Sheriff Ryan's hotel."

"But," said the Court, "you are charged with perpetrating an aggravated assault and battery on Mr. S., the hotel keeper."
"Well, yer honor," said Pat, "if I did, I on'y gin him back jist wat's in his own clutsky; an' if yer honor hadn't given him a license I wouldn't 've bin drunk; an' if I hadn't bin drunk I wouldn't 've got into the fight; an' if I hadn't 've got into the fight I wouldn't 've bin here this mornin', onyhow."
This was a process of reasoning new to the court. It was a self-evident truth dressed in plain clothes, and while the law was with the court, Pat evidently had all the logic, and he here summed up the mischief of the license system in a few sentences.
Scores of men are made drunk every day, just because it is so easy to obtain liquor.
The law places it in reach of every man. On the streets of our towns and cities are hung notices of "Choice Liquors," "Cool Lager," "Ale," and "Fancy Drinks," to tempt the laboring man to come in and spend his money for strong drink that his family needs for bread. On the path he must walk to and from his daily occupation he sees these temptations on every side. The licensed saloon and grog shop afford him every facility to become a drunkard. His appetite, renewed and kept alive by indulgence, urges him on. There is no obstacle in his road to ruin; on the other hand that road is up and made plain and easy by the law. What wonder is it, then, that the rum shops flourish while the families of their victims starve?

A CLERGYMAN'S FALL.—Rev. E. B. Rogers went from Franklin, Pa., two years ago from western New York and was installed pastor of the First Baptist Church. He became very popular as a preacher, and the good he was accomplishing made him popular with all classes. About a year ago he employed Miss Jennie Ross as his private secretary. Since that time his conduct toward the girl has been unbecoming, and together with the treatment of his wife, has given rise to great scandal. Three months ago the leaders of the church, believing that the preacher's brain was affected, sent him on a trip to Europe. On his return he preached more eloquently than ever, but the scandalous treatment of his wife continued. About two weeks ago she left the city, it was said, to gratify him, as he desired a separation. On the 7th of this month Rogers was dismissed from the pulpit of the church and left Franklin. On Thursday week Mrs. Rogers returned and on Saturday her husband arrived. Monday Mrs. Rogers applied for a divorce, charging her husband with indignities and brutality. While stating her case she wept as if heart-broken.
Some believe the man insane.
